The last runner finished the race more than an hour before. “There will be no more runners coming,” the crowds decided. They removed the tape at the finish line and started to prepare for the opening ceremony for the 1996 Atlanta Summer Olympics in the United States.

Someone whispered, “Look! There comes another runner!” A runner was just entering the stadium, but there was something wrong with his arms. Still, he kept going toward the finish line. The band and the volunteers continued their preparations for the closing ceremony. All eyes were on the runner.

Suddenly, the band started playing celebration music, and the volunteers cheered. “Go! Go! Go for it!” Two volunteers ran to the finish line with a medal. Finally, the runner ran through the tape and then fell to the ground. His name was Abdul Baser Wasiqi. He was from Afghanistan.
